The intent of this qualitative research is to investigate and understand the requisites of customer satisfaction for academic libraries' users and to give managerial hints for the implementation of user centred academic library services. In the preliminary phase of the research, we conducted both focus groups and individual interviews involving students or researchers who regularly use the library services. This study supplies a significant analysis of qualitative data that can be functional for researchers and for university managers to plan strategic and operative activities in order to improve academic library services.
